Located at the heart of Monash University’s Art & Design precinct, the new museum encompasses a suite of dynamic gallery spaces; an expansive landscaped sculpture court; a major sculptural commission by artist Callum Morton; and a series of distinctive threshold spaces, including the canopy, spine, light-well and boiler room.

Designed by Kerstin Thompson Architects, the flexible form of MUMA’s new architectural design provides increased gallery space and the capacity for MUMA to present an expanded program of exhibitions, special projects, education and public programs, alongside exhibitions from the Monash University Collection.

With spatial clarity, exposed framework and dialogue between interior and exterior, the new museum provides an inspiring platform for MUMA to explore the recent history of contemporary art, whilst being forward looking in the production, research and support of new art and ideas.
